LIGHTNING ONE OF AVIATION'S GREATEST FOES

Many Airplanes Have Been Struck in Flight, Sometimes Meaning Death

EXPERIENCES ARE GIVEN

Pilots of All Sections Tell of Happenings During The Lightning Storms

By Pierre John Huss
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent

CHICAGO, Jan. 3.—Aviation experts, determined to eliminate as many of the flying hazards as possible, have yet to conquer what appears to be one of the biggest obstacles to safety in the air. It concerns the matter of lightning striking a plane in flight. Various investigations conducted by different organizations so far have offered but small satisfaction.

A helping hand toward the solution of the problem was offered recently by Popular Mechanics Magazine, which aimed at a direct answer by asking 8,000 licensed pilots to state individual experiences with lightning.

The replies came in by the hundred, showing to what extent the gentlemen of the air are interested in arriving at some sort of definite conclusion to this atmospheric danger. On the basis of this analysis, engineers of the Ohio Brass company are now striking plane models, motor parts and full-rigged ships with man-made lightning and studying effects of the charges.

The sum total of the replies brought forth one authenticated case of lightning striking a plane in flight, several unverified cases of crashes attributed to lightning, and many unsung accounts of battles for life against the marauder of the air.

Some optimistic pilots insisted that an airplane in flight could not be struck by lightning. Nevertheless, official records state positively that eight balloons have fallen victims to lightning bolts within the past nine years; Zeppelins have been hit more than 100 times, although none were wrecked.

The verified case of lightning in which a fourteen passenger plane flying between London and Paris was struck down during a storm over Picardy, was described in a report as follows:

"Suddenly there was a loud report as a flash of lightning struck the machine. A large piece of fabric on the lower part of the plane was burned, the compass was put out of action and one engine started to miss. Apparently the permanent field of one of the magnets had been upset. On examination it was found that, in addition to the hole in the fabric, one of the main spars was scorched, all of the bonding was fused, and one of the ailerons damaged."

The deaths of Capt. Emil Carranza in 1928, Mexican ace, and Morris M. Titterton, inventor of the earth inductor compass, were blamed on lightning bolts. When a mail plane plunged to earth during the same year with motor roaring, it was generally believed the pilot had been stunned by lightning. A naval board of inquiry rendered a similar verdict in a Chesapeake Bay crash in 1927.

Curious experience attributed to lightning were related by several pilots. One man said he had not been struck but "warned up" by lightning heat while flying. He declared it was "like running up against a real hot fire." An Eastern pilot told of being cured of a desire to flirt with thunderstorm clouds after one of them had proved "too darned rough." Down-currents encountered in these electrical disturbances, according to many pilots, have caused them as much as 3,000 feet of altitude loss in a few seconds.

Another pilot recounted seeing a heavy discharge from the metal tips of his propeller blades during a storm, describing it as of a faint, bluish color which formed a narrow ring around the area swept by the blades. Still another reported that lightning engulfed him entirely as he was proceeding through a severe storm, but that he felt no ill effect with the exception of becoming temporarily blinded.

The pilot of a tri-motored transport said a flash of lightning blinded him for half a minute but caused no damage to his ship, while another reported that his ship plunged downward dangerously from a height of 5,000 feet directly after a shaft of zig-zag lightning had split the sky. After attempting to force his way through a thunder cloud three times, a western pilot said his plane "was violently thrown out by the terrific force of the boiling motion of the wind." A government pilot stated his ship wires appeared to be red-hot during lightning storms, but admitted this might be an optical illusion brought on by momentary blinding from an electric flash.

Kennel Club Meets

(Contributed)

The regular weekly meeting of the Fifth Ward Kennel Club was held at headquarters on Sunday at 3:30 a. m. All the members were present. President Mike, who was in the chair, reviewed the events of the past week, and he paid particular attention to the matter of housekeepers clamping the lid down too tightly on the garbage cans. This was contrary to the code of ethics of the club. He told the members that he was willing to submit this matter to arbitration and he would not insist that the lid be pressed down too far.

Secretary Laddie read a communication from the third ward lodge, asking for the co-operation of the fifth ward in having a law passed making all holes in cheese just one size. Several dentists had complained about the cavities and had used very forcible language.

A strong protest was raised against the new traffic rules by Silver. He argued that if the right kind of cars were put on the road fewer members would be compelled to keep away from the curb-market. They would also be able to give the motorist a better run for his money. After listening to the oratory of their "esteemed" member it was decided to change the slogan of the club from "Watch Your Step" to "Count Your Steps." President Mike advised the members who were lax in their arithmetic to take up a course so that they could put down three and carry one.

A telegram of regret was read from Rin-Tin-Tin who was unable to be present owing to the fact that coming through Croydon he couldn't find his passport, having left it in his other pants.

On motion by Pal, seconded by Jerry, it was decided to stand at attention for two minutes in memory of Beauty who "went west" trying to squeeze a wish-bone past her jaw-bone.

A brand new shin bone was awarded to Ginger for establishing a new record, making "snaps" since the last meeting. Between now and Sunday an appeal will be sent out for funds to carry out the work of this club as some of the members are sadly in need of pants.

Respectfully,
A. MUTT, Sec'y.

SEARCH IS MADE FOR MEN DROWNED IN PLANE CRASH

Ten Killed As Aircraft Crash Off the Pacific Coast

MOTION PICTURE FOLK

Crew of Divers and Fleet of Small Boats Combing Waters

SANTA MONICA, Cal., Jan. 3.—(INS)—Sorrow-stricken Hollywood today awaited the results of an ocean search for the bodies of seven of ten men who went hurtling to their deaths when two motion picture planes collided in mid-air and plunged into the sea in a mass of flames.

Something went wrong as the two cabin planes loaded with cameras and equipment swung into position yesterday toward sundown.

Flying 3,000 feet above the ocean and about three miles off shore, their wing tips interlocked and the two big planes staggered and swung together in a confused mass, then plunged into the sea in flames.

Onlookers saw three of the passengers hurled clear of the mass. Their bodies were recovered. The other seven were carried beneath the surface by the tons of wreckage.

Today a crew of divers and a fleet of small boats were to comb the waters in an attempt to locate the wreckage and recover the victims' bodies.

The death list:

Kenneth Hawks, director and husband of Mary Astor.
Max Gold, assistant director.
Captain Ralph Cook, pilot.
Lieut. Hallock Rouse, Army reserve flier.

George Eastman, cameraman.
Conrad Wells, cameraman.

Ben Frankel, assistant cameraman.
Otto Jordan, assistant cameraman.
Tom Harris, property man.
Hank Johannes, property man.

Doors had been taken off the planes before they left Clover Field in order that the cameramen would have unobstructed vision of the stunt they were to photograph. This, it is believed, will aid in liberating the bodies.

The two planes, together with a third ship, had just jockeyed into position, facing the setting sun. According to plans they were to separate at 4,000 feet to allow the third plane, piloted by Col. Roscoe Turner, to come in between. Rouse and Cook were piloting.

Turner's plane carried Jacob Triebwasser, Fred White and Fred Osborne. Triebwasser's parachute leap was to be photographed by cameramen in the two ships, but the leap was never made.

They were preparing to shoot the last scene of a film sequence for the Fox Film Corporation entitled "Such Men Are Dangerous."

The story was based on the mysterious death of Alfred Loewenstein, Belgian multi-millionaire, who disappeared from a transport plane above the English Channel July 5, 1928. Warner Baxter is starred in the film.

Witnesses declare that one or both of the pilots had perhaps been blinded by the glare of the setting sun.

Anyway the two planes wavered. One banked slightly to the right and the other swerved upward and banked to the left; then they met in a sickening crash and, locked together, plunged into the sea.

Turner's plane at that time was 1,000 feet away from the other two and at a lower altitude.

The bodies of Max Gold, assistant director; Conrad Wells, cameraman, and Ben Frankel, assistant cameraman, were identified after they floated to the surface.

Howard Hawks, brother of the dead man, and husband of Athole Shearer, sister of Norma Shearer, owes his life to a whim that caused him to decline an invitation to ride in one of the camera planes.

A second brother, William, married Bessie Love, film star, recently.

Barriade Wharf and To Place Reflectors at St. Ends

Barriade has been erected at the Mill street wharf to prevent a repetition of the two accidents which have recently occurred there. Heavy posts with bars and a warning reflector have been erected. Sufficient space has been provided between the posts whereby in cases of emergency large trucks can pass through and go out onto the dock.

A motion was made by Councilman Barrett at the special meeting of Council held last Monday evening, that the matter of safeguarding the wharf be left in the hands of the Street Committee.

It is planned to place warning reflectors at the ends of all streets leading to the river.

ONE DIVORCE FOR EVERY 30 LICENSES GRANTED IN 1929

All Marriage License Records Were Shattered in Last Twelve Months

AN INCREASE OF 237

Over 500 of the Applicants Came From Outside of The County

DOYLESTOWN, Jan. 3.—For every thirty marriage licenses granted in Bucks county in 1929 there was a divorce granted the records in the Court of Common Pleas and the Orphans' Court show.

All marriage license records in Bucks county were shattered in 1929 when a grand total of 1250 licenses were granted during the twelve months, an increase of 237 over the previous year. The records of marriage licenses shows that over 500 of the applicants came to Bucks county from Trenton and Philadelphia to secure a license.

"The outside business keeps this office on the jump throughout the year," Jacob Shelly, deputy Clerk of Orphans' Court said yesterday in compiling the record of licenses for 1929.

So far as Bucks county divorces are concerned the ratio is rather low here as compared with other counties. Taking the marriage licenses granted to Bucks county people alone and the divorces to Bucks county people, the division shows that for every fifteen marriage licenses there was a divorce granted.

During 1929 there were fifty divorce actions started and forty-two divorces were granted. There has been no large increase in the divorce business in Bucks county in recent years.

Marriage licenses granted during the year were as follows: January, 76; February, 78; March, 75; April, 82; May, 108; June, 165; July, 93; August, 128; September, 101; October, 129; November, 117; December, 95.

The average age of the applicants during 1929 was as follows: Males, twenty-seven; females, twenty-six.

During 1929 there were marriage licenses granted to 130 persons who had been divorced in a previous marriage. Seventy-eight of the male applicants had been divorced and fifty-two over the female applicants were divorcees.

During December 1929 there were 95 marriage licenses granted. The average age of the male applicants was twenty-seven years and the females, twenty-four years. Disparity in ages was not marked in December. The oldest male applicant was sixty-one and the youngest was nineteen, while the oldest female applicant was fifty-three and the youngest seventeen.

Bristol furnished the largest number of applicants in December as was true throughout the year.

"SUCKER" MERCHANDISING

A practice which has caused untold annoyance to hundreds of thousands of individuals throughout the United States is drawing the attention of the postal authorities and congress. It is known as "mail merchandising."

The system practiced by "mail merchandisers" is an adaptation of the plan first used by worthy and legitimate causes. It consists of sending to names on a purchased mailing list goods, usually neckties, handkerchiefs or cards, which may be retained at a stated price or returned. The goods as a rule are both shoddy and cheap. They may be absolutely useless to the person to whom they are addressed, yet if he neglects to return them, follow up letters are sent which take on a blackmailing character.

Uncle Sam's mails were never intended for such purposes. They burden the mails unnecessarily and wrongfully exploit low postal rates. Since the mails are not self-supporting—the postal deficit running into the millions annually—the practice amounts to making the taxpayers pay part of the overhead of these mushroom enterprises.

Victims of the system and reputable merchants who suffer from such business tactics are entitled to relief. But why wait for the government to act, when the public could provide its own relief by the simple expedient of refusing to play the part of the "sucker?"

VIGOROUS DAYS

These are days to step briskly with a swinging stride, to raise the chest, hold back the head and breathe deeply. These are the days when the cold winds blow from the north as though to test the manhood that is so powerful under a warm sun. These are days, indeed, to stir to its utmost; days of activity.

A brief interruption of cold weather and heavy rain spoiled snow slides, but many of these have been repaired by applications of water. Sledding on ice is quite as dangerous as on snow, more swift and more thrilling. Young America will not be cheated of pleasure.

Few sports are more delightful for spectators than skating, and none apparently is enjoyed more by participants. Arm in arm, racers practicing, hockey players and skillful acrobats claim attention in turn. Glowing cheeks and bright eyes, gracefully moving figures pass in review—charmed and charming even as were the Norsemen on their runners hundreds of years ago.

Truly these are vigorous days, more delightful for those who love them because they are so rare. For the same reason they should not be displeasing to those who dread them.

Too many persons are looking for a soft way to get hard cash.

The man who leads a double life takes at least two chances of getting caught.

The woman who can remain on good terms with all her divorced husbands is clever.

The employee who gets into a rut and sticks is not so certain to stick to his job.

The difference between shoppers and shoplifters is that the latter take something out of the store.

"IS EVERYBODY HAPPY?"

By ELEANORE CAREY

Copyright 1929 Warner Bros. Pictures Inc.

This novel is based on the Warner Bros. & Vitaphone production starring Ted Lewis

INSTALLMENT XXVI
 In the bedroom Gail stood listening to this conversation. First she thrilled at the sound of Ted's voice, then, hearing Mr. Molnar, her joy knew no bounds. It was short lived, however, for when Ted announced Lena's presence, all the old jealousy came back, and she felt she'd been an awful fool. Ted did not care for her, she was convinced of that now. For if Ted cared for her, why had he brought Lena home with him? Oh, how she had been misguided—how foolish she had been to have listened to Mrs. Molnar and come here to face this new humiliation! And all this time Ted was carrying on this deception and that woman was simply pushing herself into Gail's place by her experienced wiles and her knowledge of the weakness of the male sex. She was sure Mrs. Molnar was innocent—and sincerely believed all that she had told her, but this poor woman, too, she was being deceived.

Gail could hear their voices. Ted's voice and now the mother's—elated and happy for Mr. Molnar was back. That's all that seemed to matter and she felt very much "out" of the party. Lena, too, awoke and was welcomed by Mrs. Molnar although Gail did have to admit to herself that Mrs. Molnar's voice seemed a little strained. But the girl was from their own country—and she, Gail, was a foreigner to them. Ted had seemed so pleased to announce Lena's presence. Gail's heart sank. All at once she felt she understood clearly how little she fitted into this family picture and she made up her mind to leave. How she wished she could get away without being seen so that—when finally they came to look for her—she just wouldn't be there! But there was no escape from this room, except through the room where they all sat, and straightening her frock and her hair she glanced at the reflection of herself in the mirror, automatically, and went to the door of the room.

Ted noticed his mother's nervousness and asked, "What's the matter, Mother?"

"May I see you in the other room?" she said.

As they started for the dining room, the bedroom door opened. Gail walked out.

It was Ted's turn to gasp and wipe his eyes, now. He rushed madly toward her, saying, "Gail! You here?" and as he held her tightly, close to his breast—conscious only of the fact that this was Gail, she had come back, and she was just where she belonged—close to his breast. The girl struggled as much as she could manage to do, which was rather futile against the strength which had somehow come into his arms.

She forced herself enough to say to him, "I was here, but I am leaving now!" and the rosy dreams—the mad ecstasy that filled the soul of the boy when he felt her warm, young body close, suddenly vanished. It was as if some one had thrown cold water in his face.

He took hold of her hand, "You can't leave now, Gail, you can't leave!"

Gail glanced at Lena and Ted suddenly realized the situation. What could he do or say to save his catastrophe from happening again? This time it would kill him. Frantically he resisted her tugging as he heard her say to his mother, "I think you have enough guests for dinner without me. Good-bye, Mrs. Molnar, I know it wasn't your fault."

"I'm sorry, darling," the distracted old lady said. Ted, pleading with her, gazing intently into her eyes and still clinging to her hand said in a low tone, "Gail, it isn't what you think."

Lena had been watching the scene with narrowing eyelids. Content for Gail's attitude made her disclose her anger. At last as the girl had wrenched her hand free, Lena took the situation in her own hand and walked over to Gail.

"Look here, Miss Wilson, you're making a fool of yourself again!" and as the girl bristled Lena kept on—contempt, showing plainly in her face. "You're about to walk out on a man who loves you with all his heart. Haven't you sense enough to see that he doesn't love me? I'll admit it, I tried to take him away from you, but I couldn't do it." Because he loves you! It's as plain as the sun in the sky—and if you can't see it, you are the dumbest dame in this town!"

Ted broke in with, "What she said about my loving you is all true, Gail," and the tears were very near his eyes as he looked at her.

Lena still showed contempt for Gail as she said, "I'm the one to leave, and that's just what I am going to do." And she, of the more independent self-sufficient type, had distinctly, the advantage. Her feeling of resentment against Gail and the girl's attitude toward Ted made her doubly important. And although she was sincere, Lena was not the one to let go an opportunity for a dramatic situation, such as had unfortunately developed in this house.

She withered Gail with her glance—"The little fool," Lena thought to herself—"one of those clinging vine types of woman," whose injured dignity covers their actions with a cloak of respectability. Why did not Gail come straight out with it and tell them just why she left—what was in her mind and give Ted a chance to explain—instead of affecting this attitude of 'grandness,' as Lena interpreted it to be.

And she loathed the type of girl Gail affected. Small, narrow, apparently—or rather voluntarily—helpless—too good to even face life right side up—needing the protection and sheltering of some man's love, else she'd sink by the roadside. All nice and pretty and so sweet!

"Bah," thought Lena. "Thank God I am not one of those dames" and to Gail she continued her language unable to cover her disgust.

"I meant just what I said. You are the dumbest dame in this town—or else you think it 'lady-like' to be such a nappy-pammy ineffectual girl. Why don't you be regular? You have never been regular in your life."

"Don't, Lena," Ted said, "Can't you see you are breaking her heart?"

"Breaking her heart?" Lena asked sharply—"She hasn't been concerned with the fact that she was breaking your heart, has she? And it didn't do her any harm. Your mother's heart too was considerably bounced around by her treatment of you. No—it did not! Now, for once in her life when she is called for a 'show-down' she quits, just as she has always done—walks out of the picture—leaving desolation and misery in her trail, but still unconcerned about anything except Gail. Thank heavens—I am not made that way!" and Lena turned to leave the house.

"Wait," from Gail, as she saw the girl start to go.

"I'm sorry," Lena answered as she affected the air of one who is looking at a worm, "I've got a subsequent engagement."

But Gail was determined and she blocked Lena's passage. She looked shamefacedly at the crowd before she spoke—this time with understanding.

"Won't you stay for dinner with us?" Eagerly and happily Ted almost jumped to Gail's side, and as Lena came back into the room she looked approving at Gail.

"You've got sense after all!" to which the girl laughed and answered good humoredly, "Thanks."

Ted waited close by, his arms opened wide for Gail. She walked to him slowly, searching his face which was smiling behind the tears no longer manageable and smuggled her little body close into his outstretched arms.

"Barling," he murmured reverently.

In stentorian voice the butler announced from the door of the dining room, "Dinner is served!" And this relaxed the tenacity of the situation. Ted felt almost as a youngster full of pranks. He broke into a happy loud voice, "Shall we go in?" he asked of everybody, "Is everybody happy?" A chorus of "yes" rang through the room, and they formed a single filed parade.

Ted was leading—Gail next—and the laughter and commotion and hub-bub was suddenly silenced when from the dining room came the strains of jazz music—syncopated—happy—carefree—the expression of the soul of the young America.

The doors of the dining room opened wide—and there behind the festive table was Ted's band. They filed in to their seats and just as they sat down—the music stopped and a voice, bursting with joy, shouted to the assembly in general—

"Is Everybody Happy?"

KONJOLA STRIKES
DEATH BLOW TO DREAD NEURITIS

8 Years of Suffering Quickly
Ended by New and Different Medicine

MISS BLANCHE BAYER

"Konjola scored a splendid triumph in my case after all other medicines and treatments had failed," said Miss Blanche Bayer, 931 Tilghman street, Allentown, Pa. "For eight years I was a victim of neuritis. Frightful pains racked my entire body. My arms, limbs, and ankles swelled until I was helpless. No medicine helped me and I had given up hope."

"Several of my friends had been relieved by Konjola and I began taking it. Imagine my surprise and relief when, at the end of the first week, I realized that I had found the right medicine. The poisons were swept from my system, the swelling disappeared and before a month had elapsed my neuritis had entirely left me. It seems impossible that one medicine could do all Konjola did for me. Eight years of agony ended in one month; how I wish every sufferer from neuritis would try this great medicine."

Konjola is sold in Bristol at Hoffman's Cut Rate store and by all the best druggists in all towns throughout this entire section.—(Adv.)
